Introduction to the Family
The children will naturally look at this page of the book and turn it over to see what is on the next page. This page contains pictures of different families. Each family consists of a father, mother, and two children. The children are of different ages and are dressed in different clothes. The families are depicted in various settings, such as a living room, a kitchen, and a playground.

Recognition of Characters
Cutting ready... In the lesson, display page 2 and ask children to point to the character they see. For example, which is Father? The child will point and say, "This is Father." Continue with the other characters until each child has had at least one turn.

Building the Lesson
Turn to page 3. (You may let page 2 remain open.) Call attention to the easy way of adding new characters to the page. If you add a new character to the page, the children will notice it immediately. You can also add new characters to the page at any time.

which is Father?
which is Ted?
which is Ann?
which is Mother?
